As redevelopment plans for the 100 block of State Street continue to make news, Madison residents can learn about an alternate vision for the historic block across from the Overture Center.

Capitol Neighborhoods will present a special program at 7 p.m. Thursday, Jan. 26 at the Downtown Campus of Madison College at 211 N. Carroll Street. The event is free and open to everyone.

- Local historian Gary Tipler will show vintage images and describe the history of the block bounded by State, Fairchild and Mifflin Streets. People with old photos of the area are encouraged to bring them to share.
- Jason Tish, executive director of the Madison Trust for Historic Preservation, will describe how an imaginative approach to re-using the existing buildings can add vibrancy to the area.
- Architect Elizabeth Cwik will show illustrations to suggest how historic buildings on the block can be re-used and enhanced.

The Block 100 Foundation, created by Overture Center benefactors Jerome Frautschi and Pleasant Rowland, has advanced a proposal that would demolish all or parts of six buildings on the block including two local landmarks. Their proposal calls for reconstructing facades on State Street and creating a small private plaza at Mifflin and Fairchild Streets across from the Overture Center.

Capitol Neighborhoods Inc. is dedicated to improving the experience of residing in Madison's vibrant downtown and represents people who live in the five districts that surround the state capitol building. The website is at capitolneighborhoods.org
