Housing Affordability Report

City of Madison, Dane County
Calendar Year 2024
Posted December 31, 2025

The following report has been completed by the Madison Planning Division in accordance with Wis. Stat. 66.10013, and details the affordability of housing, particularly new housing in Madison and the implementation of the housing element of the City's Comprehensive Plan. The text of the statute itself is as follows:

> 66.10013 Housing affordability report. (1) In this section, "municipality" means a city or village with a population of 10,000 or more.
> (2) Not later than January 1, 2020, a municipality shall prepare a report of the municipality's implementation of the housing element of the municipality's comprehensive plan under s. 66.1001. The municipality shall update the report annually, not later than January 31. The report shall contain all of the following:
> (a) The number of subdivision plats, certified survey maps, condominium plats, and building permit applications approved in the prior year.
> (b) The total number of new residential dwelling units proposed in all subdivision plats, certified survey maps, condominium plats, and building permit applications that were approved by the municipality in the prior year.
> (c) A list and map of undeveloped parcels in the municipality that are zoned for residential development.
> (d) A list of all undeveloped parcels in the municipality that are suitable for, but not zoned for, residential development, including vacant sites and sites that have potential for redevelopment, and a description of the zoning requirements and availability of public facilities and services for each property.
> (e) An analysis of the municipality's residential development regulations, such as land use controls, site improvement requirements, fees and land dedication requirements, and permit procedures. The analysis shall calculate the financial impact that each regulation has on the cost of each new subdivision. The analysis shall identify ways in which the municipality can modify its construction and development regulations, lot sizes, approval processes, and related fees to do each of the following:
> 1. Meet existing and forecasted housing demand.
> 2. Reduce the time and cost necessary to approve and develop a new residential subdivision in the municipality by 20 percent.
> (3) A municipality shall post the report under sub. (2) on the municipality's Internet site on a web page dedicated solely to the report and titled "Housing Affordability Analysis."

Part 1: Data Reporting 66.10013(2)(a-d)

State statute requires the report include the number of subdivision plats, certified survey maps, condominium plats, and building permit applications approved in the prior year, as well as the total number of new residential dwelling units proposed in all the applications listed above that were approved by the municipality in the prior year. Table 1 below summarizes this information.

Table 1: Proposals Approved in 2024

Approval Type	Applications Approved	New Dwelling Units
Plat	6	831 single-family lots, 1,252 total lots; no new dwelling units
CSM	41	53 lots; no new dwelling units
Condo	14 (includes amendments)	No new dwelling units
Building Permit	277	2699 dwelling units

Because of the nature of the approval and construction of housing, it is difficult to reconcile the number of housing units approved or constructed within a given calendar year. Building permits for new construction may occur in the year or years following lot creation or land use approval. For example, a large, mainly residential plat may be reviewed and approved during one year, the public improvements may be completed the next year, multi-family buildings may be approved another year, and construction of the single-family residences and multi-family buildings may stretch out over many years. As such, the number of building permits, provided in Table 2 below, is not the same as the number of approved residential lots.

State statute requires a list and map of all undeveloped parcels zoned for residential development. For this analysis, "parcels" has been interpreted as tax parcels, and City Assessor's data has been used. An "undeveloped parcel" in this case is defined as any parcel with $20,000 or less of assessed improvement value. Additional analysis of the parcel data was done to remove many untaxed parcels, such as those owned by various government entities, non-profit and educational institutions, and utilities, that are, in fact, developed. Note also that the City's zoning code requires minimum lot areas and dimensions for a lot to be developable. Any future development will need to comply with all requirements, including zoning standards for lot area and dimensional requirements. As such, some "undeveloped" parcels shown on these maps may have other development constraints due to lot area considerations, dimensions, or other factors.

Because the City of Madison allows a wide variety of residential development in 32 of its 40 zoning districts, the authors of this report have provided two separate maps and lists to meet this requirement. The first map and parcel list includes those zoning districts in which residential development is the primary land use. This includes the following zoning districts:

- SR-C1 (Suburban Residential - Consistent 1)
- SR-C2 (Suburban Residential - Consistent 2)
- SR-C3 (Suburban Residential - Consistent 3)
- SR-V1 (Suburban Residential - Variable 1)
- SR-V2 (Suburban Residential - Variable 2)
- TR-C1 (Traditional Residential - Consistent 1)
- TR-C2 (Traditional Residential - Consistent 2)
- TR-C3 (Traditional Residential - Consistent 3)
- TR-C4 (Traditional Residential - Consistent 4)
- TR-V1 (Traditional Residential - Variable 1)
- TR-V2 (Traditional Residential - Variable 2)
- TR-U1 (Traditional Residential - Urban 1)
- TR-U2 (Traditional Residential - Urban 2)
- TR-R (Traditional Residential - Rural)
- TR-P (Traditional Residential - Planned)
- DR1 (Downtown Residential 1)
- DR2 (Downtown Residential 2)

Attachment A includes the required map of all undeveloped parcels zoned for residential development. Attachment B lists all undeveloped parcels zoned for residential development.

The second map and parcel list includes those zoning districts that are not intended to be primarily residential districts, but allow (typically multi-family) residential development, usually as a conditional, rather than a permitted "by-right" use. These zoning districts are primarily mixed-use, commercial, or employment-oriented. This category includes the following zoning districts:

- LMX (Limited Mixed-Use)
- NMX (Neighborhood Mixed-Use)
- TSS (Traditional Shopping Street)
- MXC (Mixed-Use Center)
- CC-T (Commercial Corridor - Transitional)
- CC (Commercial Center)
- RMX (Regional Mixed Use)
- DC (Downtown Core)
- UOR (Urban Office-Residential)
- UMX (Urban Mixed-Use)
- TE (Traditional Employment)
- SE (Suburban Employment)
- SEC (Suburban Employment Center)
- EC (Employment Campus)
- A (Agriculture)

Attachment C shows the required map of all undeveloped parcels zoned primarily for mixed-use or commercial development with permitted residential development. Attachment D lists all undeveloped parcels zoned primarily for commercial development with permitted residential development.

> NB: Two zoning districts, Campus Institutional (CI) and Planned Development (PD), also allow residential development in certain situations. However, all CI- and PD-zoned properties have sui generis zoning requirements and permitted uses, and therefore vary widely from parcel to parcel. Further, per a requirement of the zoning code, parcels zoned into PD districts must develop within certain time limits, thereby limiting the amount of PD-zoned land that remains vacant for long periods. Due to these issues, parcels within these two zoning districts have not been included in this portion of the analysis.

For reference, the only zoning districts in which residential development is not a permitted or conditional use (except for caretaker's dwellings, which are permitted or conditional uses in all of these districts, except AP) are:

- IL (Industrial-Limited)
- IG (Industrial-Limited)
- UA (Urban Agriculture)
- CN (Conservancy)
- PR (Park)
- AP (Airport)

Statute also requires a list and map of all undeveloped parcels suitable for, but not zoned for residential development, including a description of zoning requirements and availability of public facilities and services for each property. These include all parcels mapped on the City of Madison's Comprehensive Plan Generalized Future Land Use Map (GFLU) as residential, mixed-use, or downtown land uses that are not already zoned as one of the districts identified above. The GFLU categories used in this analysis are:

- LR (Low Residential)
- LMR (Low Residential)
- MR (Low Residential)
- HR (Low Residential)
- NMU (Neighborhood Mixed-Use)
- CMU (Community Mixed-Use)
- RMU (Regional Mixed-Use)
- DMU (Downtown Mixed-Use)
- DC (Downtown Core)

Attachment E maps the undeveloped parcels suitable for, but not zoned for residential development. Attachment F lists these parcels. These exhibits show that nearly every parcel in Madison that is planned for any type of residential development is within a zoning district that enables residential development. The parcels listed and displayed on the map are within the Central Urban Service Area (CUSA), which is administered by the Capitol Area Regional Planning Commission, and are conceivably within the City of Madison's service area and thereby serviceable by the City. The parcels would, however, likely require a zoning change, and potentially other land use approvals. It is expected that areas identified for residential land uses in the Comprehensive Plan can be rezoned and developed in residential zoning districts; mixed-use land uses can be rezoned and developed in mixed-use, commercial, or employment districts; and downtown land uses can be rezoned and developed in downtown or mixed-use districts. In addition, many more parcels than displayed on this map could be suitable for redevelopment if the market warrants it.

Part 2: Analysis

Whereas the first four subparagraphs of the Housing Affordability Report statute require simple reporting of residential approvals and parcel suitability, subparagraph (e) requires an analysis of Madison's residential development regulations, such as land use controls, site improvement requirements, fees and land dedication requirements, and permit procedures. The analysis shall calculate the financial impact that each regulation has on the cost of each new subdivision. The analysis shall identify ways in which the municipality can modify its construction and development regulations, lot sizes, approval processes, and related fees in order to meet existing and forecasted housing demand and reduce the time and cost necessary to approve and develop a new residential subdivision in the municipality by 20 percent. As the primary objectives of this section are to meet housing demand and reduce the time and cost necessary for residential development, baselines for these objectives are established first.

Existing and Forecasted Housing Demand 66.10013(2)(e)1
Wisconsin's Comprehensive Planning legislation requires municipalities to provide 20-year projections for land uses in five-year increments. Madison's latest Comprehensive Plan, adopted in August 2018, did just this for residential land use based on population and household projections. Table 3 shows projections updated from the Comprehensive Plan for every five years from 2020 through 2050, starting with a 2020 base. The projections were revised because the Comprehensive Plan projected Madison's population to be 257,461 in 2020 and 270,631 in 2025 and the 2020 Census count for Madison 269,840, nearly five years of growth ahead of the projection. According to the revised projections below, Madison is projected to add nearly 4,000 residents and about 1,800 households per year throughout the next decade. Recent projections from the Capital Area Regional Planning Commission anticipate even faster growth, with up to 437,000 people living in Madison by 2050, which would equate to nearly 6,000 new residents and approximately 2,800 new households annually for the next 25 years.

As a starting point, Table 4 shows the recent change in the acres of land dedicated to generalized land uses. Despite a citywide increase of nearly 2,000 acres between 2005 and 2017, the amount of vacant land or land used for agriculture has declined by nearly 1,700 acres, meaning a large amount of land already within Madison city limits is being converted to other uses, primarily residential, commercial, and parks and open space. Land dedicated to residential use increased by 1,868 acres between 2005 to 2017, greater than all other developed uses combined. Approximately 4% of developed land areas are institutional uses, such as schools, and land needed for parks and other open spaces, such as stormwater and drainage greenways, is approximately 20%. Madison's total existing land area is approximately 25% right-of-way and other assorted public uses. The land use projections, shown in Table 5, are based on the above and a variety of other spatial assumptions. However, changes in demand, economic and financial changes, and other factors may considerably alter these projections. The generalized land demand analysis provides a framework for estimating the amount of land the City will need to accommodate growth through 2040. Table 6, which follows, provides more detailed projections regarding land use demand specifically for residential land uses. Further information regarding these projections and methodologies are available in the Comprehensive Plan.

An overall issue for Madison, beyond a shortage of affordable housing, is a general housing shortage. If enough housing units are not created to meet the needs of a growing population, demand for housing outstrips supply and forces prices higher across the city and across price points and unit types. Table 7 below shows the units needed to be added each year just to keep up with current and projected growth, per the Dane County Regional Housing Strategy.

Parcel creation is necessary to provide developable sites to accommodate new housing development. Table 8 shows parcel creation in Madison via plats and certified survey maps. While parcel creation fluctuates from year to year, recent totals are much higher than the years of 2007-2009, when fewer than 200 new parcels were created each year. Parcel creation in 2023 was the up over the previous three years.

Trends in the price of land and the amount, intensity, and density of existing land uses are among the major drivers determining how land is used in Madison. The following tables and discussions provide an explanation of land price, development, intensity, and density trends. Table 9 (next page) shows that between 2010, toward the end of the Great Recession, and 2024, Madison physically expanded approximately ten square miles through attachment and annexation. During the same time, equalized land value within the city has increased from $103,799 to $188,475 per acre after several years of declines. Land values in Madison increased almost twice as fast as the rate of inflation between 2010 and 2024.

Table 9: Equalized Madison Land Values

Meeting Housing Needs – Affordability

An important aspect of the City's ability to meet existing and future housing needs is the ability to meet the needs of all household types and income levels. The City of Madison Biennial Housing Report, published in 2016, is an analysis of the city's entire housing market with a particular emphasis on the affordability of housing and breadth of housing options. Other reports, such as the Analysis of Impediments to Fair Housing Choice (2019), prepared by the City of Madison Community Development Division, and the Dane County Housing Needs Assessment (2015, updated 2019), prepared for the Dane County Housing Initiative, provide further analysis of the supply and access to affordable housing in Madison and Dane County, and were used to inform this report.

According to the 2023 US Census American Community Survey 5-year estimates data, the median household income in Madison was $76,983. 16.2% of individuals and 6.6% of families were below the poverty level.

The US Department of Housing and Urban Development issues annual income levels that are used by municipalities and other local governments for affordable housing programs. Most affordable housing projects funded by the City of Madison or other public sources limit residence in these units to households below these thresholds. The most recent income limits summary for Dane County is shown in Table 10.

The mismatch between unit prices and households' ability to pay leads to housing cost burden. It is generally preferable for households to spend no more than 30% of the household income on housing costs. Housing cost burden is defined as a situation in which a household expends more than 30% of its household income on housing costs. Households experiencing extreme housing cost burden spend more than half of household income on housing. According to the Analysis of Impediments to Fair Housing Choice's data sources, housing cost burden was experienced by 27.4% of homeowners and 54.6% of renters in Madison. Table 11 breaks down the households in Madison experiencing housing cost burdens by income level. The table displays the number of households experiencing no cost burden (less than 30% of household income contributed to housing costs), households with housing cost burden (30% to 50% of income going to housing), and households with extreme housing cost burdens (more than 50% of income going to housing). The majority of both renters and owners with annual incomes less than $50,000 experience some degree of housing cost burden. Households in higher income bands are not immune to housing cost burden: 37% percent of homeowners and 47% of renters with annual incomes of $50,000 to $75,000 experience housing cost burdens.

Madison exhibits an unbalanced relationship between the number of households in each income bracket and the number of housing units that area available. There are shortages of very affordable rental units when compared to the number of households making 30% or less of Area Median Income (AMI) who can afford only those lowest rents without being cost burdened. The cumulative rental stock only equals the demand for affordable stock when all households and units affordable at up to 80% AMI are included. There is a similar housing mismatch for ownership housing at the most affordable levels. An additional issue results from households in higher income brackets that are able to choose and occupy “downmarket” housing that is more affordable to them, thereby occupying housing that could otherwise be occupied by households making less and unable to afford other housing without becoming cost burdened. It is assumed that many upper income households own or rent units more affordable to them that are in turn removed from the available stock for households requiring more affordable units. Note that there may be additional demand if certain households wish to move from one occupancy type to another. For instance, there may be additional demand for affordable owner-occupied housing, but renting households cannot move into that market, either because they cannot afford it, or there is not enough supply.

Part 3: Analysis of Residential Development Regulations 66.10013(e)

State statute requires that this report also analyze residential development regulations in Madison, including land use controls, site improvement requirements, fees and land dedication requirements, and permit procedures. It requires that the report further analyze the financial impact that these development regulations have on the cost of each new subdivision. The statute requires the report include calculations regarding the "financial impact that each regulation has on the cost of each new subdivision." These costs could include, but are not limited to, the following: engineering scopes and estimates, architecture costs, land costs and holding costs, dedications and fees, and miscellaneous permitting costs.

The author of this report believes that all information required by the statute, and available to the City, is provided in the report. However, we note that land use approvals, whether discretionary or permitted uses, are not based on project costs or financing. Developments that are not directly subsidized by the City of Madison do not provide financial information other than an estimated project cost to establish building permit costs, which occurs very late in the review and approval process. Pro formas and other financial information are not required by or provided to the City. As such, baseline housing development financial information is difficult to identify. Further, while the analysis required by §66.10013(2)(e)2 regards reduction in the time and cost necessary to approve and develop a new residential subdivision, single-family home construction, the vast majority of which has occurred in new subdivisions, has accounted for only 14% of all new housing construction in Madison in the past decade. On the other hand, infill multi-family development constitutes a large portion of housing development, and the vast majority of new affordable housing in Madison.

Creating new platted lots in the City of Madison requires review by the Plan Commission and approval by the Common Council, and City of Madison ordinances, policies, and procedures follow Wisconsin State Statutes Chapter 236 regarding platting lands and recording plats. State law requires that plat approving authorities take action on preliminary and final plats within 90 and 60 days, respectively, unless the time is extended by agreement with the subdivider. After Common Council approval, the time taken to record plats varies greatly depending on a number of circumstances, nearly all of which are dependent on the subdivider; in recent years, the time between approval and recording of individual plats varied from less than three months to more than ten months.

Development of single-family homes on platted lots in Madison is generally free from restrictions other than general zoning and building permitting typical to nearly all Wisconsin communities. Zoning requirements in residential districts include site design requirements typical of most zoning codes, including minimum lot areas and setbacks, and maximum heights and lot coverages, but Madison's requirements are typically less restrictive than other municipalities in Dane County. While the City of Madison includes building design standards for downtown, commercial, and mixed-use zoning districts, it has comparatively few standards for residential zoning districts. The City of Madison enforces almost no specific building or architectural requirements for single-family homes or small multi-family buildings beyond typical international and Wisconsin building code requirements consistent with most municipalities. Design requirements are (1) front door orientation toward the street, (2) street-facing garage door placement at least two feet behind the plane of the forwardmost façade element of a house, and (3) a limitation of street-facing garages to less than 50% of the total width of the front façade of a house. In some municipalities, zoning administrators or building inspectors provide architectural control over single- and two-family dwelling units, and larger developments are reviewed by architectural review commissions. Other communities have design-related requirements for certain residential zoning districts or require staff or Plan Commission design review for developments with more than two units. Historic districts and planned development zoning districts in Madison are subject to additional architectural and design regulations, similar to those found in many other municipalities.

The fees charged to developers and builders of housing in Madison vary widely depending on the housing structure type and the point in the development process a developer or builder is involved in. Fees for land use review are required for many development types. The Parks Division charges a park infrastructure impact fee for all housing units, as well as a requiring either park land dedications or a park land impact fee (a fee in lieu of dedication) for housing developments. The Engineering Division administers fees for erosion control, stormwater management, and water and sewer utility work. Driveways, traffic impacts, and traffic infrastructure changes may also require fees in certain situations. Some developments are assessed for the planting of street trees in the tree terraces adjacent to development site. A variety of building permitting and inspection fees are administered by the Building Inspection Division. Table 12 below summarizes the City of Madison fees applicable to residential development and construction. Please refer to the City of Madison CY2018 Housing Fee Report for more detailed fee information. Table 13 compares only residential building permits issued in 2018-2022, showing that fee amounts per permit have nearly doubled, likely due to the number of larger building projects, while fee amounts per dwelling unit actually decreased about seven percent. In comparison, the regional construction cost index increased by almost 25 percent.

Part 4: Strategies to Lower Costs of Housing Development 66.10013(e)(2)

State statute requires this report to identify ways in which Madison can modify construction and development regulations, lot sizes, approval processes, and development-related fees to reduce the time and cost necessary to approve and develop a new residential subdivision in the municipality by 20 percent. Table 14 identifies strategy categories and indicates how each can reduce the time required and cost of residential development. No one specific strategy or action can be guaranteed to account for the time and cost reduction, but a combination of methods could help Madison meet existing and forecasted housing demand and reduce time and costs necessary to approve and develop a new residential subdivision by 20 percent. Each strategy is described in more detail in the following sections.

Strategy 1* - Reduce Minimum Lot Areas

Land is a significant contributor to the cost of housing. As seen in Table 9 of this report, the 2022 equalized value of land in Madison was over $160,000 per acre on average. In 2018, the equalized value for residential land only was approximately $300,000 per acre, while the average assessed land value for residential land developed with new construction between 2010-2018 was $429,000 per acre. The average assessed value for all vacant land (lands with no taxable improvement value) in Madison in 2018 was $39,000, and agriculturally zoned land within city boundaries was assessed at $8,000 per acre on average. The market value of vacant or agriculture land can change dramatically depending on plan recommendations, changes to zoning, adjacency to existing development, and proximity to roads or utilities. In a review of 17 residential lots listed for sale on Zillow.com within the City of Madison in November 2025, the mean price was $897,000 per acre and the median was $781,000 per acre.

Because of the impact of land costs on the total cost to develop and sell, the amount of land required to develop housing can have an outsized impact on the cost. Table 15 compares the minimum lot area per dwelling unit required by the zoning codes of various municipalities in Dane County. The City of Madison enables denser development than all other communities reviewed, often by a considerable margin.

Table 15: Comparison of Dwelling Lot Minimum Areas

* Single-family detached houses allowed as either permitted or conditional use in residential zoning districts; not including manufactured home parks; no institutional or community living arrangements
+First unit is 4,000 SF, each additional 1-bedroom is 1000 SF, 2000 SF for 2-bed, 3000 SF for 3-bed, 8000 SF minimum lot size

The City of Madison Common Council passed Ordinance ORD-21-00044 on June 1, 2021 that amended chapters of the Zoning Code to increase allowable densities and decrease conditional use thresholds in several multi-family residential, mixed-use, and commercial districts to enable the quicker approval and construction of more dwelling units at higher densities. Ordinances ORD-23-00078 and ORD-24-00061, adopted August 1, 2023, and September 10, 2024, respectively, reduced minimum dimensional requirements and minimum setback requirements for lots in several residential zoning districts.

Strategy 2* - Limit Architectural Requirements

The City of Madison enforces almost no specific architectural requirements for single-family homes or small multi-family buildings beyond basic building forms and typical building code requirements consistent with other municipalities in Wisconsin. The limited requirements for one- and two-family house design regard orientation of the front door and orientation and width of street-facing garages. The City of Madison does not review exterior materials or architectural style for permitted-use single-family and small multi-family buildings. As such, it cannot further reduce or streamline review in this regard.

Strategy 3* - Establish More By-Right Development

When the Madison Zoning Code was completely rewritten and adopted in 2013, it allowed a wider variety of development to occur in conventional zoning districts, but not much more “by-right” development. Nearly every mixed-use building or significant multi-family residential development approved before 2013 required a zoning change to Planned Development zoning, which was negotiated on a case-by-case basis and reviewed by the Urban Design Commission, Plan Commission, and approved by the Common Council. Under the new zoning code, a majority of such developments can be approved in conventional zoning districts, but “by-right” multi-family residential development is limited by thresholds such as height, number of dwelling units, or building size, that trigger conditional use approval by the Plan Commission. The zoning code has many thresholds for conditional uses, meaning that most development proposals involve discretionary review with opportunities for the Plan Commission to ensure that relevant standards are met and any appropriate conditions of approval placed on them. However, conditional use approval by the Plan Commission is a shorter and simpler process than a zoning change, which must also be approved by the Common Council.

By allowing more "by-right" development, it is possible time and direct costs (holding costs for land, costs for consultant time at meetings) and risks (uncertainty regarding timing of interest rates, construction costs, and whether and under what conditions a proposal will be approved) inherent to the approval process could be reduced. However, by-right development may create adverse impacts on sensitive neighborhoods and populations, potentially impacting existing affordable housing, as it would occur absent input by residents, neighborhood associations, City staff, and the Plan Commission.

Single-family homes are permitted by-right in most situations, though new plats creating lots for single-family houses must be approved by the Common Council in accordance with State statute.

A specific type of housing development that could be targeted for additional by-right construction is the "missing middle." Missing middle housing is a range of housing types scaled between single-family detached houses and larger apartment buildings, and includes duplexes, triplexes, four-units, attached rowhouses, and cottage clusters. Missing middle housing can be compatible in scale with most single-family residential areas, and can help meet ever-growing demand.

The City of Madison Common Council passed Ordinance ORD-21-00044 on June 1, 2021 that amended chapters of the Zoning Code to increase allowable densities and decrease conditional use thresholds in several multi-family residential, mixed-use, and commercial districts to enable the quicker approval and construction of more dwelling units at higher densities. Strategies and actions such that were adopted and some that continue to be considered by the City of Madison to establish more "by-right" development to reduce the time and costs necessary to approve and develop new residential subdivisions include:

- Adjust thresholds (number of dwelling units, building size, height, etc.) between permitted and conditional uses.
- Adjust the requirement for Plan Commission approval of the demolition of all existing buildings.
- Explore making the demolition of single-family houses to build a new single-family house or another permitted use a staff-level site plan approval.
- Adjust the zoning code as necessary to maximize potential for permitted context-sensitive density increases in residential and mixed-use districts by right by supporting "missing middle" housing types.
- Explore modification to City ordinance to eliminate the conditional use requirement for small (two- to four-unit) multi-family structures within close proximity of one another.
- Explore additions to the zoning code, such as maximum height maps to increase predictability and better ensure protection of the public interest.

On January 25, 2023, the City of Madison Common Council adopted an ordinance to create a new Transit Oriented Development Overlay zoning district that generally follows the highest-frequency transit routes through the city and adjusts thresholds between permitted and conditional uses and increases the overall scale of development permissible within the overlay district.

Strategy 4 - Streamline Permitting Processes

By streamlining permitting processes and shortening timelines, the direct costs and risks of the approval process for development that requires discretionary review could be reduced, resulting in a faster and less expensive pathway for residential development. Without accounting for initial due diligence and planning by developers prior to approaching the City or the time it takes to actually construct a building, there are essentially three stages to the land use approval process: pre-application, formal review, and post-approval/permitting. These three stages can vary between 4 and 18 months for larger developments – a timeline heavily dependent on project complexity, the types of approvals sought, and the development team involved. The first two stages of the land use approval process apply only to proposals involving discretionary approvals. "By-right" development, which includes nearly all single-family homes, involves only the third stage—a much shorter process. An expansion of "by-right" residential development would shorten the approval process for some developments.

Pre-Application – The pre-application stage requires written notice to the area Alder and any registered neighborhood or business association (unless waived by the Alder) 30 days prior to formal application, and often involves one or more meetings with staff or neighborhood groups as the proposal evolves to a detailed submittal to the City. Meetings with neighborhood groups are not required, but are expected by many Madison residents and Alders for larger developments. Developments that go through this process are more likely to be approved than those that forego this process. The timeline for the pre-application stage can vary from a few weeks to several months based on project scale and complexity, level of interest by neighbors, expectations and procedures of a particular Alder or neighborhood association, the developer's urgency, and the design stage at which stakeholders are approached.

Formal Review –The length of the formal review process for land use approvals (rezoning, conditional uses, demolition, and land divisions) is already optimized for the need to provide statute-required public notices, review by City agencies, preparation of staff reports for commissions, and distribution of reports to commissioners and applicants. Depending on the type of approvals requested, most proposals are reviewed within 6-11 weeks of the formal submittal. Proposals inconsistent with adopted plans, those missing important information, or those changed significantly by the applicant after submittal likely involve longer formal review processes, but these delays are caused by and controllable by the applicant. Land Use Application materials have very recently been updated to include more specific instructions for applicants to minimize changes and missing information that result in delays and extra costs during the formal review process.

Applications for conditional uses are the most common discretionary approvals, accounting for approximately half of all applications reviewed in 2024. The median review time for these conditional use reviews without UDC review was 42 days, and 56 with UDC review, this latter figure 14 days less than 2023. Fewer than 5% of all conditional use reviews, including those also requiring UDC review, took more than 70 days from submittal to Plan Commission approval. Table 16 shows the typical review period for the most common types of review.

Table 16: Review Period by Application Type

Application Type	Time Frame	Median (days)
Conditional Use (no UDC)	Submittal to Plan Commission Approval	42
Conditional Use (w/ UDC)	Submittal to Plan Commission Approval	56
Zoning Map Amendment	Submittal to Common Council Approval	71
Certified Survey Map	Submittal to Common Council Approval	64
Plats	Submittal to Common Council Approval	64

Source: Planning Division

Post-Approval/ Permitting – Following any discretionary land use approvals, the procedure to obtain building permits is essentially the same as that for "by-right" permitted uses. The variation in timelines for this third stage is almost entirely dictated by development teams: it can vary greatly based on the amount of work still to be done by the development team and the level of diligence to address all ordinance requirements and conditions of approval. Often, developers try to minimize risk up front by obtaining formal land use approvals before purchasing property, securing financing, and/or investing in final design and engineering work. These items can take weeks or even several months to accomplish before final materials are submitted for administrative review.

On June 6, 2022, the City of Madison Common Council adopted Ordinance 22-00054 repealing the "protest petition," removing the ability of outside parties from administratively delaying the approval of land use decision regarding housing further.

City of Madison development review planning staff are currently investigating best practices from peer and surrounding communities to better address some of these issues. Additional best practices strategies may be added to this list or explored by the City at a later date.

Upon further consideration by the Plan Commission, Common Council, and other stakeholders, strategies and actions such as the following could be further considered by the City of Madison to reduce the time and costs necessary to approve and develop new residential subdivisions:

- Explore further expanding the list of "by-right" developments (as discussed above).
- Work with Alderpersons to establish clear policies for neighborhood meetings.
- Continue to abide by statutorily-mandated CSM and Plat review timelines.
- Review the length of the discretionary review pre-notification period.
- Continue to further clarify the requirements of application materials.
- Encourage pre-application and application submittal meetings between developers/applicants and City staff to avoid delays further along in the review process.
- Encourage post-approval meetings with development teams to clarify the steps between approval and the issuance of permits.

Strategy 5* - Convert to Electronic Plan Review *(completed)

Most of the materials use in discretionary land use reviews by the City, as well as for many permits were required to be submitted in paper form through early 2020, often requiring many copies. In response to the changing nature of work due to the COVID-19 pandemic, City staff orchestrated a conversion to all-electronic application and permitting processes during the first half of 2020, which has reduced printing and copying costs for applicants and allowed instantaneous distribution of plans to necessary parties. Electronic review provides more time for reviewers, more timely comments, and better ability to respond to applicants. However, removing the option for paper applications and review may inhibit some applicants without access to the necessary software or applicants resistant to non-paper options.

Strategy 6* - Eliminate or Minimize Off-Street Parking Requirements

Parking can be a major cost of development. Design and building costs for structured parking can range from $25,000 to $40,000 per parking stall, and underground parking can cost more than $50,000. Surface parking typically costs $3,000 to $5,000 per parking stall to design and build, but has much higher land costs per stall than structure parking. While parking is an expensive aspect of mixed-use and multi-family development, flexible mechanisms in the Madison's zoning code reduce the impacts of off-street parking requirements on redevelopment. Of note, parking requirements have been eliminated for many development types in most commercial and mixed-use zoning districts, and the code allows developers to seek reductions to parking requirements where they do exist. However, the market has more influence on parking ratios than City of Madison code requirements. With the exception of a few downtown and UW Campus-area developments and some affordable housing developments with low parking ratios, it is currently typical for developers to propose a minimum of at least one parking stall per dwelling unit, and they often propose much more. Parking is also commonly a primary interest of neighbors, neighborhood groups, and nearby businesses due to real or perceived impacts that inadequate parking may have on public streets.

On January 25, 2023, the City of Madison Common Council adopted an ordinance to create a new Transit Oriented Development Overlay zoning district that established no minimum parking requirements for any uses within the overlay district, as well as lowering the maximum allowed vehicle parking.

Upon further consideration by the Plan Commission, Common Council, and other stakeholders, strategies and actions such as the following could be further considered by the City of Madison to reduce the time and costs necessary to approve and develop new residential subdivisions:

- Further reduce or eliminate parking requirements for multi-family residential development, and allow the market more control over the off-street parking provided in each development.
- Consider lowering the maximum parking ratio for multi-family residential development.
- Consider prohibiting parking (whether surface parking or all parking) in certain central areas for certain project types.

Strategy 7* - Enact High-Density and Multi-Family Zoning

Madison has a variety of zoning districts that allow for high-density residential development, which enables the production of more affordable housing through economies of scale and more efficient use of land. Currently, much of the new multi-family residential development (and a great deal of all housing citywide) is proposed, approved, and constructed Downtown or in mixed-use zoning districts, where there are few, if any, formal maximum densities in the zoning code. Most mixed-use districts allow purely residential buildings on only a very limited basis and at relatively low densities, but allow greater densities with the inclusion of commercial space, so there is a very strong incentive or requirement for a commercial first floor. Downtown, maximum height limits serve to indirectly limit density (heights are restricted within one mile of the State Capitol to preserve the Capitol view throughout the City). Outside of Downtown, all purely residential zoning districts and mixed-use districts allowing purely residential buildings include direct density limitations in the form of a minimum lot area per dwelling unit. Usable open space requirements also indirectly impact the allowable density. Additionally, recommendations in adopted plans often also recommend densities lower than what may be mathematically possible within a zoning district. Madison's updated Comprehensive Plan has increased the residential density ranges on the Future Land Use Map based on trends in recently approved development.

The City of Madison Common Council passed Ordinance ORD-21-00008 on February 10, 2021 that created the Regional Mixed Use (RMX) District. This district is intended to provide opportunities for high-intensity mixed-use centers supporting a variety of multifamily housing options and commercial activities that serve the needs of the region. These areas typically include large-scale sites supportive of multistory buildings and should be the most intensively developed areas in the city outside of the downtown. Staff believes this district will fill a gap not covered by the other mixed-use and commercial districts.

Table 17: Districts Outside of Downtown Allowing Multi-family Residential Buildings
Updated per ORD-21-00044 adopted June 1, 2021

Zoning District	Minimum Lot Area per DU (for purely residential buildings)	Maximum Density (DU/acre)	Usable Open Space per DU	Maximum # Units

TR-U1	750	58	160
TR-U2	350	124	40
NMX	500	86	40
TSS	350	124	40
CC-T	500	86	40
CC	750	58	160-320, based on # of bedrooms
TE	2000	21	20 (per bedroom)
SE	2000	21	400

Strategies and actions such as the following were and continue to be considered by the City of Madison to establish more "by-right" development to reduce the time and costs necessary to approve and develop new residential subdivisions:

- Increase the allowable density for purely residential buildings in mixed-use zoning districts.
- Increase the allowable residential density for small multi-family buildings in residential districts.
- Create a new high-intensity district that would allow for high-density residential or mixed-use buildings for application outside of the Downtown area.
- Explore alterations of usable open space requirements, or provide case-by-case consideration of usable open space when projects require discretionary review, to be reviewed relative to factors such as unit mix, proximity to public open spaces, and quality of open space design.
- Explore the more widespread replacement of density maximums with building height maximums.
- Adjust zoning regulations to maximize the potential for context-sensitive density increases.
- Explore zoning and density planning through a public engagement processes within aldermanic districts to select specific areas or parcels for upzoning and promotion for higher-density development.

- Proactively rezone areas to be consistent with neighborhood plans, neighborhood development plans, and special area plans.

The City of Madison Common Council passed Ordinance ORD-21-00044 on June 1, 2021 that amended chapters of the Zoning Code to increase allowable densities and decrease conditional use thresholds in several multi-family residential, mixed-use, and commercial districts to enable the quicker approval and construction of more dwelling units at higher densities.

On January 25, 2023, the City of Madison Common Council adopted an ordinance to create a new Transit Oriented Development Overlay zoning district that allowed larger mixed-use buildings at greater intensities as permitted uses within the overlay district.

Strategy 8* - Permit Accessory Dwelling Units *(completed)

Accessory dwelling units (ADUs), sometimes called a "granny flat" or "mother-in-law suite" provide affordable housing while having the potential to generate income for the homeowner. Since 2013, ADUs have been allowable as a conditional use on all properties in Madison with a single-family home, with the stipulation that the property owner must live on-site in either dwelling. The City of Madison Common Council passed Ordinance ORD-21-00087 on December 15, 2021 that amended sections of the Zoning Code to make accessory dwelling units permitted uses, rather than conditional uses, in all residential zoning districts. The ordinance also increased the maximum area per lot and maximum size of ADUs. It is still to be seen if this will result in a significant increase of ADUs in the foreseeable future due to the high cost of construction of these units (which are more akin to constructing an entirely new dwelling unit than remodeling a room) and the difficulty of securing financing.

Upon further consideration by the Plan Commission, Common Council, and other stakeholders, strategies and actions such as the following could be further considered by the City of Madison to reduce the time and costs necessary to approve and develop new residential subdivisions:

- Develop pre-approved "off-the-shelf" ADU building plans that reduce design costs and uncertainty.

Strategy 9* - Financial Assistance

The City of Madison has used Tax Incremental Financing (TIF) to help catalyze a variety of (re)development, including as a tool to actively encourage affordable housing development. The current City of Madison TIF policy takes housing affordability into account when calculating the level of potential financial assistance. More directly, the City of Madison Affordable Housing Fund was established to direct funds from general obligation debt and closing TIF districts towards housing developments seeking WHEDA Section 42 tax credits and making a long-term commitment to retain certain income restrictions on a high proportion of units.

Upon further consideration by the Plan Commission, Common Council, and other stakeholders, strategies and actions such as the following could be further considered by the City of Madison.

- Reconfigure application of Tax Incremental Financing to actively encourage and support affordable housing development.
- Continue to plan for Tax Incremental Financing District closure to supply revenue to the City of Madison Affordable Housing Fund
- Continue to increase annual funding for the Affordable Housing Fund

Strategy 10 - Reduce Fees for Low-Cost Housing

Madison could explore opportunities to expand the types of housing that qualify as "low cost housing" and that are exempted from certain impact fees under Wis. Stat. § 66.0617(7) and MGO Sec. 20.08, or expand the types of fees that are eligible for this exemption. A low-cost housing exemption from park impact fees has already been established for housing units with a 30-year income restriction for families at 60% of the area median income. This directly reduces the per-unit costs of developing these units.

Similarly, because state, county, and local sales taxes add to the cost of building materials, exempting building materials for workforce housing from sales taxes would lower the construction costs for such housing. This would require working in concert with other levels of government—particularly the State of Wisconsin.

Upon further consideration by the Plan Commission, Common Council, and other stakeholders, strategies and actions such as the following could be further considered by the City of Madison to reduce the time and costs necessary to approve and develop new residential subdivisions:

- Explore opportunities to reduce the development costs of low-cost housing, similar to the existing low-cost housing exemption from park impact fees.

Strategy 11 - Enhance Housing Committees

Madison currently has several housing-related committees, including the Housing Strategy Committee, the Community Development Authority (and the CDA Housing Operations Subcommittee), and the Landlord and Tenant Issues Committee, to review issues of affordable housing supply and demand and recommend additional policies or strategies for housing development. Staff from several agencies involved in affordable housing also serve on a Housing Staff Team. These committees can work to more strategically allocate resources and work to enhance opportunities for the creation of affordable housing in Madison. In addition, Dane County also has committees and staff engaged in similar housing policy reviews.

In 2024, the City's Housing Strategy Committee created a report regarding Housing Supply and Affordability with a number of strategy recommendations also found in this report. In late 2024, Common Council approved a proposal to combine the Housing Strategy Committee and Landlord and Tenant Issues Committee into a single Housing Policy Committee. The new Committee will begin meeting in 2025.

Upon further consideration by the Plan Commission, Common Council, and other stakeholders, strategies and actions such as the following could be further considered by the City of Madison to reduce the time and costs necessary to approve and develop new residential subdivisions:

- Further coordinate the activities of City and County housing-related committees to maximize effectiveness and eliminate redundancies.

Strategy 12 - Land Banking

Land banking is a strategy to acquire, hold, manage, and develop properties such as vacant lots, abandoned buildings, or foreclosures, and transition them to productive uses, including affordable housing development. The City or a related authority can buy and hold land, selling it to developers via a request for proposal for residential development. Land banking has been used successfully by the City to encourage redevelopment of the Capitol East District and other areas, and gives the City the ability to require the inclusion of affordable housing options in development. A City landbanking policy has been adopted, a site evaluation process has been developed, and the City has begun acquiring properties for future low-cost housing development. Several parcels along South Park Street, for example, have been acquired for future development of low-cost housing to implement the South Madison Plan.

Upon further consideration by the Plan Commission, Common Council, and other stakeholders, strategies and actions such as the following could be further considered by the City of Madison to reduce the time and costs necessary to approve and develop new residential subdivisions:

- Explore establishing future landbanking partnerships with other government entities and non-government organization partners to encourage additional affordable housing development.

Strategy 13 - Other Public Funding Strategies

Municipal financial tools to encourage affordable housing development are often limited, and often amount to efforts to provide "gap" funding or special project funding in order to leverage and secure additional investments from county sources (CDBG/HOME), housing authorities (CDA), state sources (WHEDA), and national or federal sources (Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, Federal Home Loan Bank, HUD, etc.).

Madison utilizes general purpose revenues and general obligation debt to fund affordable housing programs and projects, particularly the Affordable Housing Fund, used to directly assist affordable housing projects to leverage tax credits and other funding mechanisms. While the use of general revenues and debt allows flexibility and creativity, affordable housing must compete with many other needs for limited funding.

Municipal funds can and have been used for providing low-interest or no-interest loans to affordable housing developers, low-interest or no-interest loans to non-profits for land acquisition and remediation costs, infrastructure and site remediation costs (intersections, water/sewer, etc.), down-payment assistance programs, gap financing for (low income housing tax credit projects, on-site supportive social or health services, job training assistance, and direct rental subsidies. In 2022, the City's Housing Forward program provided low-interest loans for construction of new ADUs. Statewide resources for Down Payment Assistance Programs (DPAP) through WHEDA and the Federal Home Loan Bank of Chicago (FHLBC) are available and Madison could use its programs to leverage and maximize these sources.

Upon further consideration by the Plan Commission, Common Council, and other stakeholders, strategies and actions such as the following could be further considered by the City of Madison to reduce the time and costs necessary to approve and develop new residential subdivisions:

- Provide low- or no-interest loans to non-profit affordable housing developers for various development costs.
- Fund a down payment assistance program to improve access to affordable owner-occupied housing.
- Create a first-time homebuyer savings account program to improve access to affordable owner-occupied housing.

Strategy 14 - Pursue the Repeal of State Law Pre-emptions Limiting the City's Ability to Provide Affordable Housing

In analyzing methods for Madison to make housing development more affordable, and housing access easier and more affordable to residents, it must be acknowledged that the City of Madison's ability to influence housing affordability is limited due to State law limitations and preemptions. As a City, Madison continues to directly support affordable housing through subsidization. While critical, this effort can only impact a fraction of households and new residential units. The City of Madison could advocate for increased local control of housing policies including the repeal of specific preemption of municipal authority (such as the existing prohibitions of rent control and inclusionary zoning).

Requiring a percentage of housing units in a development be reserved as "affordable" units would ensure a supply of affordable housing opportunities spread throughout the community. The City of Madison's Inclusionary Zoning Ordinance was in effect from 2006 to 2009, when it was eliminated as the courts deemed it a form of rent control, which is prohibited by Wisconsin statute. The City of Madison is currently limited to incentivizing affordable housing rather than requiring it.

Ordinances could be created to allow for greater heights, densities, or general development intensities when affordable housing is included in a proposal could generate additional affordable housing opportunities. However, Wisconsin statutes prohibit the use of density bonuses for affordable housing or for zoning decisions made based on the condition that residential units remain affordable, as the State sees it as a form of rent control.

Upon further consideration by the Plan Commission, Common Council, and other stakeholders, strategies and actions such as the following could be further considered by the City of Madison to reduce the time and costs necessary to approve and develop new residential subdivisions:

- Work with other municipalities, developers, State legislators and the Governor to eliminate certain municipal preemption statutes that restrict the City's authority to require or incentivize affordable housing so that the City may:
    - Re-enact inclusionary zoning to promote development of affordable housing.
    - Provide density bonuses for affordable housing.

Conclusion

This section has suggested over 40 methods in 14 topic areas in which the City of Madison can address the requirements of the statute regarding the time and cost necessary to approve and develop new residential subdivisions and housing. There is not a single specific strategy or action that can be guaranteed to account for a 20 percent time and cost reduction, but a combination of methods discussed herein account for such a reduction. Certain factors, such as the City of Madison's small minimum lot area compared to surrounding municipalities, limited architectural requirements, adjustment of conditional use thresholds, conversion to electronic plan review, and land banking could, together, have an outsized impact on the cost and time required to develop housing in Madison. Based on all the factors above, the City of Madison could, by making some of these changes, meet existing and forecasted housing demand and reduce the time and costs necessary to approve and develop new residential subdivisions and housing.
