To my children in our garden

Daniela Chandler

To naps in the wrap, you sleep as I toil

And tiny hands digging into the soil

To “mommy! I helped!” grins on pink faces

And Zinnias we put in glass vases

To pumpkins and zucchini that makes you look small

And whatever we will harvest until the fall

A white bus is shown in motion, blurred to suggest speed, moving from left to right across the bottom of the frame. The background features a bright blue sky with a textured, painterly appearance. In the distance, a building with a prominent dome is visible, partially obscured by trees with autumn-colored foliage in shades of yellow, orange, and brown.

Remember

The arc of a fairytale is long.

In the middle, it looks like a tragedy.
